Sarah Grafton and Polly Huang recently worked on a case that had one special aspect: how to deal with patients that used marijuana before coming to the dental appointment? With the growing use of the drug for both medical and recreational purposes and the lack of clear guidelines regarding issues related to impairment to consent treatment, this case study was an ideal one to pursue. The result is the recent JADA publication "Dental treatment planning considerations for patients using cannabis: A case report." This case illustrates the paradigm of exploring cases to both develop scholarly work and expose students to those experiences that Dr. Vieira has modeled for the clinical departments.
